submission to Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights based on Human Rights Council resolution 32/31 on Civil Society Space

Transparency and civil society participation in international meetings of anti-corruption review

The present submission is a shortened version of an upcoming report by Transparency International which assesses transparency and civil society participation in international and regional anti-corruption review mechanisms.

These include:

- The UN Convention against Corruption (UNCAC) Review Mechanism
- The OECD Working Group on Bribery (OECD WGB) for the OECD Anti-Bribery Convention and other instruments
- The Financial Action Task Force (FATF), which reviews member state compliance with its recommendations
- The Group of States against Corruption (GRECO) for the Council of Europe instruments
- The Mechanism for Follow-Up (MESICIC) on Implementation of the Inter-American Convention against Corruption of the Organization of American States (OAS) and its Committee of Experts
- The OECD/ACN Istanbul Action Plan sub-regional peer review programme

Our findings and recommendations cover the basic framework, which should allow civil society to actively and meaningfully participate in anti-corruption discussions in the international meetings of anti-corruption review mechanisms, namely (1) rules about access to information and civil society participation; (2) proactive disclosure of information; and (3) on-site access to information and participation in meetings.

International standards

The most important standards to consider in assessing the performance of international review mechanisms are international human rights standards, including the rights of access to information and participation. Likewise, relevant international anti-corruption standards, such as UNCAC Article 13, should be considered to govern the anti-corruption review mechanisms and their secretariats.

Human rights review mechanisms, such as of the UN Human Rights Council, provide for high standards of transparency and civil society participation and there is no reason – based on either complexity or sensitivity – why anti-corruption review mechanisms should not achieve the same level of standards.

Publication of access to information and participation rules

Overall there is a lack of information about rules on access to information and participation in the international meetings of review mechanisms and in some cases there are no detailed rules at all.

The OECD/ACN Istanbul Action Plan has clear access to information rules for civil society organisations participating in its monitoring processes, including at its international meetings, but it does not have rules for anyone else not participating in the process.

For GRECO the general rules on access to information of the Council of Europe apply. General OAS rules apply to MESICIC and its constituting document also has some references to access to information. For both the rules are publicly accessible.

The three remaining review mechanisms – the UNCAC, OECD WGB and FATF – do not publish any access to information rules concerning their international meetings. This means that interested citizens and civil society organisations cannot rely on any available norms to assist them in accessing the details of these meetings.

With regard to participation rules, several of the review mechanisms publish rules online about attending meetings or side meetings of the mechanism, although in some cases this information is hard to find. For example, the Istanbul Action Plan refers to such rules in its review methodology, which is a highly technical document and not easily accessible to citizens.<sup>2</sup> (See further information in the Annex.)

Proactive online disclosure of information

Our survey found important gaps in proactive disclosure of information in relation to international meetings. This included deficiencies in access to timetables and agendas, lists of participants and meeting documents. The UNCAC review mechanism has the best online access to information about its meetings.

Timetables

Each mechanism publishes timetables of their international meetings for the current calendar. These are useful to provide at least a minimal level of information on the work of these meetings.

Agendas

The full provisional agenda is available for the UNCAC review mechanism's Implementation Review Group sessions as well as of the Conference of States Parties. The full agenda is also available for MESICIC international meetings.

The OECD/ACN Istanbul Action Plan reports that information about its monitoring meetings are published on-line in advance of the meeting.<sup>3</sup> The provisional agenda of the OECD WGB and GRECO meetings are partially accessible; the review schedule indicates which country reports will be discussed at their meetings.

The FATF does not publish a provisional agenda ahead of its review meetings.

The list of meetings and relevant materials are available, www.oecd.org/corruption/acn/istanbulactionplan/

Lists of participants

None of the mechanisms publish a preliminary list of participants before their meetings, which prevents civil society from initiating any discussions in advance with representatives due to attend. This may be because states parties do not provide this information to the secretariat of the review mechanism until the last minute.

Only the UNCAC, the GRECO and MESICIC review mechanisms publish the final list of participants after their meetings.

Meeting documents

The UNCAC and the MESICIC mechanisms also publish the list of documents tabled at the meeting and the documents themselves. The other mechanisms do not do this, which prevents the public and civil society from accessing concrete information about the content of these meetings.

For those mechanisms that adopt resolutions, decisions or statements, these are available online. Summaries or minutes of the meetings are also posted online by all the mechanisms except the OECD WGB.

Civil society submissions

Fostering participation in public discussions means that review mechanisms should enable a wide range of opinions and facts to be made available in the public online space that they create. It should be possible to easily find there official reports, CSO reports and records of their discussions (consultations) taking place on- or offline.

The MESICIC has the best practice of displaying all the documents of a country's review on a country page, including civil society submissions. Not only that, but the MESICIC review timetable includes suggested timing for civil society inputs.

It was not possible to find any civil society submissions about country compliance on the websites of the other mechanisms except for the web pages of the UNCAC CoSP which oversees the UNCAC review mechanism. Such submissions are sometimes made in the case of the OECD WGB, GRECO and OECD/ACN Istanbul Action Plan mechanisms, although civil society submissions about country compliance are scarce in any of the mechanisms apart from the MESICIC. The OECD WGB occasionally organises consultations on cross-cutting topics, receives and publishes submissions from civil society.

With regard to the UNCAC review mechanism, short submissions by non-governmental organisations (1000 or 1500 words) that do not make reference to specific country situations are posted by the UNODC on the designated web pages for meetings of the Implementation Review Group and the CoSP. Non-governmental organisation submissions that report on the UNCAC compliance of a particular country may not be posted on the IRG web pages but can be posted on the CoSP web pages.

Onsite access to information and participation

The study of the six review mechanisms found important gaps in the approaches of five of them in relation to on-site access to information and more active forms of participation.

Most importantly, civil society representatives may not participate in the formal plenary meetings of any of the review mechanism bodies, whether as active participants or observers, except in the OECD/ACN Istanbul Action Plan.

In the case of the UNCAC, civil society is excluded from participating as observers in meetings of the UNCAC Implementation Review Group even though participation is foreseen by the Rules of Procedure of the UNCAC Conference of States Parties<sup>4</sup> and even though the former does not carry out any review work.

The best standard in this area is established by the OECD/ACN Istanbul Action Plan review mechanism, covering countries in Eastern Europe and Central Asia. This mechanism allows civil society representatives to attend its plenary meetings as more than observers; they are active participants. As the review manual for the Istanbul Action Plan process says:

Participation of civil society is promoted through contribution to the preparation of the monitoring report, participation in the on-site visits and in the plenary meetings. The civil society may also contribute to the monitoring by preparing “shadow” reports which will be taken into account in the country assessment. Public participation, transparency of the monitoring process and the publication of the reports remains an important advantage and outstanding feature of Istanbul Action Plan.<sup>5</sup>

Further, in its practical guide for civil society, the Istanbul Action Plan states that:

Representatives of the civil society can take part in the plenary meeting, including presenting their opinions and proposing amendments to the draft monitoring report.<sup>6</sup>

As to the other systems, despite the fact that UNCAC<sup>7</sup> and the MESICIC<sup>8</sup> review mechanisms explicitly recognise the importance of civil society participation, representatives of civil society are excluded from their international meetings. At best some of the mechanisms, such as GRECO, allow an invited civil society representative to enter the room, to make a statement, possibly respond to questions or comments and then leave.

FATF holds formal meetings with the private sector, but not with civil society. It appears to have plans to include civil society in workshops in discussions at future Experts Meetings but to our knowledge, this has not yet materialised.<sup>9</sup>

Summary of findings and recommendations

Anti-corruption review mechanisms and their processes seek to determine national compliance with international anti-corruption standards and to formulate policies and priorities. However, the mechanisms are themselves performing badly when it comes to respect for international human rights standards on access to information and civil society participation.

The findings of this study indicate that civil society organisations are not welcome at the table at international meetings when governments discuss the anti-corruption performance of their peers, with only one exception – the OECD/ACN Istanbul Action Plan.

This is bad news because excluding civil society diminishes the effectiveness of review mechanisms. If they were more respectful of international human rights standards on transparency and participation, they would yield better results with the benefits of civil society expertise, experience and increased ability to reach citizens.

All the review mechanisms need improvement and most have a considerable distance to go to meet international standards for transparency and participation.

- Overall there is a lack of information about rules on access to information and participation in the international review mechanisms.

Recommendation 1: All review mechanisms should publish rules on access to information and civil society participation in international meetings.

- Important gaps in access to information exist for international anti-corruption meetings, including access to timetables and agendas, lists of participants and meeting documents.

Recommendation 2: All review mechanisms should publish all information required for an understanding of and potential participation in the meetings without prior request.

- Important gaps remain in five review mechanisms in relation to on-site access to information and more active forms of participation. The OECD/ACN Istanbul Action Plan showed best practice of the six.

Recommendation 3: All review mechanisms should allow on-site access to information and participation in the international meetings.

Transparency International calls on the states parties and secretariats in charge of these anti-corruption mechanisms to set a better example of how to comply with international obligations. According to international standards, transparency and civil society participation are among the fundamentals of anti-corruption efforts. Pertinent review mechanisms should build on instead of forging these.

<sup>19</sup> There are meetings organised ad hoc with CSOs, typically at the launching or closure of an evaluation round. The four evaluation rounds were launched 01.01.2000, 01.01.2003, 01.01.2007, 01.01.2012 respectively, so these meetings take place every four years on average. These meetings take the form of an "exchange of views". The only example available on GRECO's website was in 2010 (http://www.coe.int/t/dghl/monitoring/greco/news/index\_en.asp#2010). In March 2017 the High-Level Launch of the Fifth Evaluation Round included a debate with civil society participation (<https://www.coe.int/en/web/greco/conferences/high-level-launch-fifth-evaluation-round>).
