A group of diverse children are running happily through a grassy park. In the background, there are large trees and a clear sky. The children are wearing various colorful clothing, including a light blue shirt, a teal shirt, a white shirt with colorful dots, a red dress with a butterfly, a black t-shirt with 'THE BEST' and an arrow, and a white dress with colorful dots.

Children's Communication Matters Regardless of Frontiers (Article 19)

Children's right to communicate is promoted by the Early Childhood Interdisciplinary Research Group (ECIR) at Charles Sturt University in Australia.

As part of our recent Early Childhood Voices conference we asked children across the world to draw themselves talking to someone.

Their drawings are displayed in four Children Draw Talking Global Online Galleries. We listened to 200 hundred children (2-12 years) from 20+ countries.

Article 19

Everyone has the right to freedom of opinion and expression; this right includes freedom to hold opinions without interference and to seek, receive and impart information and ideas through any media and regardless of frontiers.

(Universal Declaration of Human Rights, United Nations, 1948)

Feelings about talking

The majority of children felt happy about talking.

The children drew themselves talking to:

28.5% of parents had concerns about how their child talked or made speech sounds

(similar to the Longitudinal Study of Australian Children, McLeod & Harrison, 2009).

Children provided

“recommendations to decision and policymakers, including .. the United Nations, and others, to advance human rights in the future”.

Grown-ups should listen.

Children are smart, kind and important.

“Children are smart, and kind and we are young and can do things like playing and running. Grown-ups should listen to children because we are so important”

Children deserve to be heard. We are irreplaceable.

“Children want to be heard and adults should listen to children because they deserve to be heard. We know our [own] life better, we have imaginations, we care about the environment and we are the next generation so if you don't care for us it will be the end of mankind, gone, that's it. We are irreplaceable”
